Sam Enzer joined Unchained to unpack the sentencing, discussing the fairness of the length, explaining how the $11 billion forfeiture would work and how it's different from the bankruptcy proceedings. Additionally, Enzer provided insights into the kind of prison SBF would end up in and into the three-year supervised release SBF will face after his prison term. The conversation further delved into the broader impact of the sentencing on the crypto industry, suggesting it could signify the end of a dark chapter.

Speaking on an episode of Unchained, Sam Enzer, a partner at Cahill Gordon, explained that in cases of fraud, the government has the power to seize any and all assets held by the perpetrator, even those that are unrelated to the fraud, for its behalf. "If that's in his name and it's still out there, [the government] could seize it, sell it, and use the proceeds to compensate victims," Enzer said (in fact, the penthouse has already been seized by the bankruptcy estate since it was bought in part with customer funds). In Bankman-Fried's case, Enzer said that rather than seizing Bankman-Fried's assets for itself, the government has elected to return the funds it recovers to the victims of the fraud.

"This sentence balances the need to punish SBF for a fraud of epic proportions and deter others from emulating his crime, while at the same time giving SBF a light at the end of tunnel—an opportunity to be redeemed and return to society at an older, and hopefully wiser age," Sam Enzer, a partner at Cahill Gordon & Reindel, told Unchained.

Enzer also said he felt the sentence was an important moment for the crypto industry as a whole.

"The sentence puts behind us a dark chapter and shows that our society has taken meaningful steps to purge the cryptocurrency sector of bad actors like SBF, to clear the way for the many honest entrepreneurs and technology developers seeking in good faith to innovate and build a brighter future for all of us with the transformative promise of blockchain technology," Enzer said.

The first thing that will happen Thursday morning is Judge Lewis Kaplan will confirm that he has received relevant materials, including victim letters, the government's and Bankman-Fried's sentencing submissions and a pre-sentence report by the U.S. Probation Department, which calculates and recommends an "advisory U.S. sentencing guideline range," said Samson Enzer, partner at Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP. Enzer is a former federal prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York.

Another prediction about Bankman-Fried's the length of Bankman-Fried's prison sentence came from Sam Enzer, a former SDNY attorney and chair of Cahill Gordon's [Cryptocurrency & FinTech] group. He told the Unchained podcast that he expects 'a sentence north of 20 years.'
