Lewis Rinaudo Cohen Joined “From the Vault: The BitGo Podcast” to Discuss Why Clear Rules Let Crypto Move Faster

Date: 08/19/26

CahillNXT partner and co-chair Lewis Rinaudo Cohen recently joined Zain Bedi on “From the Vault: The BitGo Podcast” for an in-depth conversation on the regulatory landscape shaping the future of digital assets.

In the episode, Lewis explains how ambiguity in existing rules has historically slowed adoption and created uncertainty that discourages participation by major financial players. Rather than stifling the industry, Lewis argues that clear and tailored guidance from lawmakers and regulators can unlock faster, more sustainable growth across the crypto ecosystem, giving institutional participants the confidence they need to enter the digital assets space, invest in product development, and build lasting infrastructure.

The conversation also examines how banks, asset managers, and other traditional financial institutions approach digital assets when legal guardrails are well understood, and what holds them back when they are not. Lewis and Zain discuss the evolving U.S. legislative landscape, including recent and forthcoming efforts to establish comprehensive frameworks for digital assets, such as stablecoin regulation and market structure reform. Throughout the discussion, Lewis offers his perspective on how these developments are shaping the path forward for the industry and why getting the rules right now will determine how quickly and responsibly the crypto ecosystem can scale.
