

Helping Kids Through Education

The U.S. Department of Justice sued to block the merger of two major cinema advertising networks, asserting that cinema advertising is a distinct relevant market to the exclusion of other video advertising. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit revisited and reaffirmed its ruling from earlier this year that a domestic corporation could not assert price-fixing damages claims on behalf of its foreign subsidiaries but deliberately left undisturbed the Department of Justice's ability to bring enforcement actions against participants in the same price-fixing conspiracy.

David Januszewski, left, and Peter Sloane, partners at Cahill Gordon & Reindel, hold awards presented by Seymour James, attorney-in-chief of The Legal Aid Society, for their pro bono work on behalf of clients of the Kathryn A. McDonald Education Advocacy Project during the EAP Fall Benefit at New York Law School Wednesday.

The EAP provides early intervention, special education and general education advocacy for children in New York City's child welfare, delinquency and persons-in-need-of-supervision systems.
