John is an associate in the Washington, D.C. office of Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP where he focuses his practice on litigation matters with an emphasis on matters relating to securities and regulatory enforcement, white collar defense, internal investigations, securities and commercial litigation, crisis advisory, and FCPA, anti-corruption, compliance and trade sanctions.

John represents global corporations, financial institutions, boards of directors and select individuals in litigation and appeals, as well as before government and regulatory bodies. His practice covers securities litigation, government investigations including SEC and FINRA enforcement actions, criminal inquiries (including FCPA), various internal investigations (including those overseen by audit committees and special committees), commercial litigation, and class action defense. He also advises companies in connection with FCPA diligence for mergers, acquisitions and other investments in jurisdictions with high corruption risk and works with clients to implement effective post-acquisition compliance programs.
